Name	Davit Gogilashvili
Story	Davit Gogilashvili was arrested on November 30, 2024, at 01:01 AM near the Parliament of Georgia. His lawyer was able to meet with him only at 9:00 AM, by which time Gogilashvili had been transferred to the temporary detention facility in Mtskheta. Following the meeting, it was revealed that Gogilashvili had been subjected to inhumane treatment during his arrest. Specifically, he had been repeatedly subjected to physical and verbal abuse, beatings, and degrading treatment. His health condition was so severe that immediate medical intervention was required. An emergency medical team transported him to a healthcare facility. According to the documentation provided by the emergency medical team, Gogilashvili had sustained an intracranial injury and other physical trauma inflicted by members of the special task force during the protest. He exhibited severe headaches, nausea, multiple episodes of loss of consciousness, and knee pain. After being transferred to the Mtskheta Medical Center, medical Form #100 detailed Gogilashvili's injuries, including intracranial trauma, superficial nasal trauma, and superficial knee trauma. Additional symptoms included nasal pain, dizziness, headaches, nausea, and abdominal pain caused by superficial trauma. Gogilashvili experienced several episodes of loss of consciousness during the incident. His condition was described as acute, with a moderate level of severity. Subsequent medical examinations confirmed a nasal fracture, necessitating immediate medical intervention. His condition was ultimately assessed as critical.

Story	On December 5, Erekle Loladze, founder of "Loladze Family Winery," was discharged from the clinic after suffering severe injuries during the pro-European protest on the night of November 30. He sustained fractures in both jaws and will continue his rehabilitation at home. He said, "It was set up like an ambush, and the masked men came out of nowhere. My brother and I were close to each other and didn't run, but they separated us and beat us. They dragged my brother a little further down. They also beat me when I fell. After the first fall, they were ordered to take our hands back. They held our hands and sprayed pepper spray in our faces. They mostly hit us in the face, and as soon as we fell, they started kicking us. How could anyone do that with their feet or hands? Then we heard someone say, 'There are cameras,' and we were told to stop. 'Let's look over there, it's enough here.' At that moment, your journalist Nanuka Kajaia recalls that when I left, there was a line of robocops, and they pushed us into a corridor. It wasn't a quick route; they dragged us back and forth to continue the beating. A group of about five people continued to beat us for 10-15 minutes. I have a bilateral fracture of the lower jaw."

Name	Zviad Maisashvili
Age	23
Story	A demonstrator was severely beaten by multiple police officers on Rustaveli Avenue (in front of the Parliament building in Tbilisi). The violence occurred after he and his brother arrived at a rally, witnessing a chaotic situation where police were attacking protesters and journalists. Zviad, who had no equipment other than a mask, fled towards the Rustaveli metro station but was surrounded by police and kicked multiple times in the face and groin. He lost consciousness, and by the time he regained awareness, he was in a medical facility. In his interview with Studio Monitor Maisashvili said the following: „At first, I didn't realize that it was a policeman. But, after he started toward me, I knew he was a cop. He was wearing a mask. He rushed toward me, punched me out of the blue, and I collapsed. Suddenly, I'm surrounded by police officers kicking me from all sides. And then I passed out. What happened next is in that video circulating around. I don't remember. I was unconscious. Later I learned from my brother that one police officer threw me down, trying to save me, but other cops turned against him, and he passed out, too. Eventually, I came to in an ambulance. I have a concussion, multiple fractures in the nasal bridge. I visited my doctor today. They removed my cast, but there is a risk in case I hurt my nose again.... It takes a lot of care to make sure it heals properly. I've never cursed at police and never fired anything. But they attacked me purposefully, targeting the facial area for some reason. That must be something new. It used to be different. This time, everyone is injured in the head. I was lucky not to be on the list of those arrested. Actor Giorgi Bakhutashvili saved me by lifting me and putting me in an ambulance. They called an ambulance, and he carried me to the vehicle.”

Name	Avtandil Tvitinidze
Story	A protester from Gori, was severely beaten during the November 30 rally, resulting in a fractured nasal bone and an open wound. Local NGO, Rights Georgia reports that, despite being in intense pain, he was not given proper medical attention at the detention center. His trial began at 00:30 on December 2, but when his condition worsened, an ambulance could not transport him until the judge separated his case and postponed the hearing. After being transferred to Ghudushauri Clinic, Titvinidze's injuries, including the fractured nasal bone, were diagnosed. He underwent surgery, with the wound sutured and the nasal bones reset. Titvinidze stated that special forces officers beat him with a baton, causing the fracture. When he requested medical assistance, officers gave him a used sock to stop the bleeding. His trial has been rescheduled for December 5, with local NGO Rights Georgia representing him in court.

Name	Davit Jaliashvili
-------------	--------------------------

Story	detained during the December 1 demonstration, says that special forces severely beat him during and after his arrest, and even threatened to rape another detainee. According to Jaliashvili, the police took his shoes as well. In an interview with Formula, he described being arrested at 4:00 am while trying to help others. Initially, he thought he was being arrested by someone in disguise. He resisted, explaining he wasn't aggressive, but was dragged away. Jaliashvili described the abuse he endured as beyond human boundaries: "I've never seen anything like it, not even in movies." He was beaten multiple times by officers in a corridor before being taken to a minibus where the beating intensified. He was thrown to the ground and kicked in the face and head by around 20 officers, with up to 50 involved in total, taking turns. He also said that his shoes were taken and he was further threatened and beaten with a club. Despite sustaining injuries—including a broken head, stitches, black eyes, and a slightly broken nose—Jaliashvili expressed that, while hurt, he felt lucky they weren't worse. David Jaliashvili in his interview with the Studio Monitor said the following: "After we passed the ranks of special forces, away from the eyes of media outlets, they carried me aloft. And everyone on either side of this corridor punched me and kicked me, some in the legs and arms, others in the face. But that was nothing compared to what happened next. They threw me in this microbus and beat me for at least 30 minutes. What happened before that was just a slap on the wrist. They punched me right in the nose and jaw, in the most vulnerable areas, also kicking me in the ribs. That seemed not enough, so they switched to kicking me in the legs, in the muscles, so I couldn't walk afterward. This continued until we reached the minivan that took us to the station. Everyone we met on our way punched us in the face. And we were barefoot, cold, soaking wet, and they doused us with water inside. They stripped me, took away my shoes, saying that they were too nice. They took everything I had in my bag. They stole my bag. And they stole a jacket from the person who was with me. "... I've no clue why they felt this sexual urge toward us. They threatened to rape us with batons and even physically, literally. I don't want to get into the details... It's sort of... But forget about raping, they threatened to kill us."

Name	Saba Kevkhashvili

Story	According to Social Justice Center, on the morning of December 1, after the arbitrary dispersal of a peaceful mass gathering on Rustaveli Avenue, special forces violently assaulted Saba Kevkhishvili. The brutal physical assault by masked special forces officers resulted in severe injuries, including fractures to his facial bones (nose, jaw, and eye socket) and a concussion. Saba Kevkhishvili's detention and assault by special forces followed the use of special means, including a large amount of tear gas, to break up the peaceful protest. To demonstrate the peaceful nature of the protest, Kevkhishvili walked toward the special forces on Rustaveli Avenue carrying the flags of Georgia and the European Union. Footage from live television broadcasts shows Kevkhishvili being approached by one of the special forces officers, who asked him what he was protesting. Kevkhishvili responded by showing the officer a video on his phone of another protester, Zviad Maisashvili, being brutally beaten. He told the officer that he could not agree with violence. Following this exchange, the officer, who appeared to be a leader of the group, made the decision to detain Kevkhishvili. According to Kevkhishvili, after his detention, he was placed in a minibus near Kashveti Church, where several special forces officers continuously and relentlessly beat him on the face, back of the head, and body. While assaulting him, they also verbally abused him, threatened him, and demanded to know if he would continue participating in protests. During the detention, they confiscated his mobile phone and personal belongings.

Story	Actress and TV presenter Natia Bunturi was picked up by three robocops who claimed they were helping her escape danger. However, they took her to a side street, where she was surrounded and questioned. Suddenly, one of the officers hit her twice in the head, causing bleeding and leaving her unable to speak. She was later led back to her friends. Despite the incident, Bunturi expressed relief for not being alone and urged others to be cautious.

Name	Lazare Maghlakelidze
Story	Lazare Maghlakelidze , a citizen who was beaten during a protest on December 2, shared his experience with media. He was detained at dawn and subjected to multiple beatings by riot police. He was released from the Ingorokva clinic on December 3. Maghlakelidze described how the riot police waited until no journalists were nearby, then began assaulting him. Initially, two officers restrained him, but soon others joined in. They covered his head with a raincoat, and he was punched in the face by several officers. He lost consciousness during the beating and, when he regained awareness, the assault continued. He recalled being placed in a minibus with three other detainees, where they were beaten again by five special forces officers in the dark. Maghlakelidze recounted being subjected to horrific abuse, including threats and what he described as "rape with a baton." Despite his injuries, he asked the officers to remove his blood-soaked raincoat. The Georgian Young Lawyers Association, referencing lawyers from the Legal Aid Network, stated that many of the detainees from the December 2 protest were severely beaten. Those detained described being assaulted by at least six riot police officers, who took turns during the violence inside the minibus.

Name	Alexy Tirkia
Age	22
Story	Alexy Tirkia was injured during the December 3 protest and is currently under medical anesthesia at Ingorokva Clinic, in a comatose state. He sustained an open scalp wound, a fracture to the frontal bone and orbital wall, and a contusion injury to the frontal lobe. His eyeballs were not damaged, but he has traumatic hemorrhage in the membranes. Despite undergoing surgery and repeated CT scans showing no negative changes, he remains unconscious and cannot recall the incident. According to his doctor, Tirkia was struck in the face by a gas capsule, likely fired by special forces. His uncle, Ioseb Chanadiri, reported that Alexey had spoken to his grandmother before losing consciousness, explaining that he was under siege, and during the conversation, his girlfriend was shot in the leg while he was hit in the eyebrow area by the gas capsule. Tirkia's parents are both in emigration.

Story	Ioseb Babaev, the owner of an anti-occupation resto bar and an activist, emphasized the importance of citizen participation while attending the grandparents' protest rally on Rustaveli Avenue. He stated, "Everyone should be here today. This Russian riot police must end. They are beating and torturing children. They are making videos, and these children are not crying. These are Russian riot police, this must end. Not only me, many Georgians will die because of them." Babaev was detained on December 3, during a protest rally in Tbilisi, where he was physically assaulted.

Story Dato Abuladze, was detained by riot police during a demonstration, beaten, and is now receiving treatment at Ingorokva Clinic. According to Ekaterine Tortladze, chairwoman of the Auresi Foundation, Abuladze was at the protest with a friend when three riot police officers attacked them, took their belongings, and beat them. He was initially taken to a police station without an interpreter, despite the fact that Abuladze's only language is sign language. Abuladze is currently being treated for bruises around his eyes, a concussion, and injuries to his legs. With the help of activists, arrangements were made for him to contact a lawyer. His rights are being defended by a lawyer from the Partnership for Human Rights.

Story Giorgi Kilasonia was arrested on November 28, charged with disobedience to police and hooliganism. According to his lawyer, the activist was subjected to severe physical abuse during the arrest, sustaining injuries to the head and facial area. Kilasonia's condition was

	so critical that he could not even be placed in a detention facility and was instead transferred directly to a medical institution. Lawyer stated: „Furthermore, it was established that these officers were not present at the scene but were instead in their vehicle at the time. Despite this, they claimed to have participated in the arrest. The defense argued that if they were indeed involved in the arrest, they would have witnessed the inhumane treatment Kilasonia endured, as well as the extensive injuries to his face. The officers, however, stated that they "did not see" when or how these injuries occurred. This explanation was deemed absurd, given that they were allegedly only three meters away from the incident and actively participating in the arrest alongside the special forces. Regarding the body cameras, the officers stated that they had "lost them during the ongoing protests," but this claim raised doubts, as it referred to the very first day of the protests when a large number of people were present. The defense suggested that the cameras were deliberately not produced as evidence. The lawyer emphasized that this behavior raises serious questions about the integrity of the police account “

Name	Aleksandre Keshelashvili
Story	Journalist with Publika, Aleksandre Keshelashvili was detained on November 29 by riot police. "It was the night of November 28, going into November 29. I was standing on the corner of Chichinadze Street with other media representatives. I felt safe; the situation didn't seem tense or out of control. Suddenly, we saw a group of masked individuals with no identification marks running directly toward us. They were shouting aggressively and cursing at both protesters and journalists. When I saw them rushing, I thought they were about to arrest a citizen. I began stepping back, trying to record from a safer spot, but they grabbed me and pulled me into their group. They immediately started beating me. I shouted that I was a journalist, but I soon heard one of them say, 'So, you're a journalist? Here's what we'll do to you,' followed by insults. It was then that I realized it didn't matter who I was or what my profession was; they were determined to hurt someone, anyone, with enthusiasm. For a while, they dragged me around, punching me and trying to rip everything off. I had identification marks on—a helmet, a gas mask, and a large press badge. I also had two cameras, which they took from me. They tore off my press badge, ripped off my gas mask, and tried to remove my helmet. It seems they hurt themselves punching my helmet because they struggled to take it off. They then formed a corridor and started hitting me from both sides as they dragged me toward detention. I collapsed several times, trying not to fall completely, but I saw people running behind me to hit me again. My only thought was to endure as long as I could. When I thought it was over, I looked up, and that's when I was hit the hardest. I fell and blacked out for a few seconds. When I came to, I saw someone kick me in the face.

They dragged me further and took me behind the Parliament building. When I regained full consciousness, I remember saying, 'I can't take it anymore; stop hitting me, just arrest me.' At the station, doctors were waiting for us. They insisted that we urgently needed to be taken to the hospital. One detainee was losing consciousness; they couldn't stop my bleeding. My nose was in bad shape, and my head was also bleeding. I can't say they took us to the hospital quickly. They didn't remove my handcuffs for a long time and didn't even offer me water. They started drafting my charges, which included an 'admission of guilt,' stating that I was shouting obscenities and insulting the police. That was a complete lie, and I refused to sign. Only after that did they transfer me to the clinic.

At the hospital, they conducted examinations. I had head injuries and am still under observation; there may be further complications. The most severe injury was to my nose, which had multiple fractures and required surgery. I also had swelling in the temple area, pain in the back of my head, neck, ribs, and legs.

What hurts me the most is not the physical pain but the fact that I thought I'd return to work soon, only for the doctor to tell me that the recovery for my nose will take a long time. On the second day, when I fully processed everything, I felt much worse. Physical pain would have been easier to bear than this. For 11 years, I've been working in the field, covering every protest, always outside. Now I'm stuck at home, watching what's happening on television. One goal of attacking the media is not just to harm us physically but also to prevent us from returning to work. I won't say I'm scared, though. I'm hopeful I'll recover soon and return to covering events. Now, I'm even more motivated to continue." – Says Aleksandre Keshelashvili with Publika.

Story	Translator Data Kharaishvili, who was arrested and brutally beaten by Special Forces during a protest, recently left the clinic. Kharaishvili shared his experience with Pirvels, recalling the arrest and the violence he allegedly endured at the hands of law enforcement officers in a police vehicle. He states that the violence against the activists by members of so called Gomelauri's (Minister of Internal Affairs) agency was filmed by Zviad Kharazishvili, the head of the Special Tasks Department, who is also known as "Khareba." "They were torturing us, telling me, 'Now curse Khareba,'" says Kharaishvili. He continues, "When I bent down to pick up the phone, I was kicked in the face. The so-called law enforcement officers came toward me, and they had no identification, no badges—just masks. They immediately began beating me and dragged me toward the car. I grabbed onto two or three people, and they dragged me horizontally, with others following. Anyone who reached me hit me. Once they got me to the car, they told me to stand up, and then they hit me again. They tore off my earring, which was in my left ear. They lifted me into a so-called minibus, where another detainee was already being beaten. Those who weren't beaten yet joined in. We started as two, then a third person was brought in, then a fourth, and eventually, there were six of us. Everyone had to go through that. They would say, 'If you get this one through, we'll take care of him.' Khareba was filming all of it and would say, 'Now curse Khareba.' There were elements of torture. They were trying to get us to say something. At that moment, Khareba stood by, wearing a cap, though his face was visible, and he was clearly enjoying the situation."

Name	Davit Okruashvili
Story	Davit Okruashvili was beaten and later detained by special forces behind the Parliament building on November 29. "They beat me very brutally. After the call to leave the area, we moved in the direction they instructed, but the special forces came from behind on that street as well. There was nowhere to go. Standing there was enough; it didn't matter if you were throwing stones, bottles, or just standing—simply existing as a person was enough to be mercilessly beaten"

	by these special forces, who resemble ‘Robocops’ or ‘bio-robots’ who seem to enjoy beating people and nothing more. When I tried to move and leave the area, masked special forces apprehended and started beating me. About five of them were beating me at the same time. I lost consciousness, and when I came to, they were dragging me. Then they stopped and searched my pockets. Unfortunately, there were no cameras as we were in a small park area below street level. They took everything from my pockets—my phone, house keys, car keys—but left my wallet and told me to move behind the Parliament building. As I walked, other special forces detained me again and put me into a cordon behind the Parliament. There, I was hit several more times. You probably know what it means to pass through a cordon. Then I was handed over to the police. The police didn’t know what to do with me because there was no explanation for why I had been detained or beaten. Even at the station, they didn’t know what to write in the report, so they noted down ‘failure to comply with orders.’ I have a fractured bone below my eye socket from being hit so many times. I underwent surgery for this on the morning of November 30, after the beating on the 29th. I also have bruises behind my ear, injuries to my head, and a large bruise on my side," said Okruashvili on TV pirveli.

Story	On November 29, during a protest on Rustaveli Avenue, Saba Brachveli, a lawyer with the Open Society Foundation, was injured by a rubber bullet fired by special forces. He sustained injuries near his eye and facial area. Brachveli recalls standing approximately 100 meters away from the special forces when he was struck by the rubber bullet. "The ambulance crew assisted me. On Chitadze Street, police officers began taking photos and videos, which we know what that implies when they do that... We moved to the other side of the Parliament on Ingorokva Street. I was at least 100 meters away from the special forces when they used the water cannon; they fired a single bullet, and it hit me near the eye—not in the eye, I was lucky. My eyebrow and cheek are injured," Brachveli recounted. He added: "Absolutely no one is afraid of these violent individuals, this illegitimate violent entity. Today they shoot us with rubber bullets; if we tolerate this, things will be worse tomorrow."

Name      Giorgi Chutkerashvili

Story      Giorgi Chutkerashvili recounted being severely beaten by special forces during his detention. He was thrown to the ground, struck in the head, and threatened with death. Despite being in intense pain, the officers continued to assault him, including attempts to break his arm and finger. They also took a photo of him and questioned his involvement in organizing protests, which he denied, stating he was simply a participant.

Giorgi Chutkerashvili: in his videointerview with Studio Monitor said the following: „I was walking at a normal pace. There were, of course, neck-slapping and kicking. I told them, “Stop. I’m going with you. You don’t have to do that.” But, for some reason, they threw me down and carried me aloft. As we passed the cordon, one of the special forces officers took off my sneakers. I thought they were going to put me in a patrol car to take to the police office. But they threw me into some punitive route taxicab where I was severely beaten by at least 10 officers. They took turns as they got tired. The rest of the special forces watched this spectacle from the outside, smirking at this abuse of human beings. Then they threatened me with a weapon. One of them grabbed a gun and pointed it at me. Several times, as I covered my face with my hands, they would kick me in the exposed side of the liver. At some point, I got spasms, I collapsed and could barely exhale. When I exhaled for the second time, this special forces officer leaned over me, brought his masked face close to mine and—I will never forget it—asked me: “Are you OK?” I said yes. And immediately he punched me in the nose. And they were marauding at that, taking away my jacket, shoes, and probably backpack that they have not returned to me. Then, in about 30 minutes after giving us a brutal beating, they told us we would be transferred into a patrol car. I got off the vehicle, with no jacket or shoes, and soaking wet, because it was already raining. So, I’m walking, beaten up, toward this patrol car about 50 meters away. As I walked this distance, every special forces officer on my way punched me and kicked me. One of them even said, “He still looks healthy—nothing works on him!” And another one replied, “Let’s break his finger.” And they started breaking my arm, forget about the finger!”

Story	Lazare Komakhidze had been arrested on November 29 while protesting the government’s decision peacefully. After arrest he had been subjected to physical violence, torture and ill treatment. Lazare Komakhidze with his interview with the Sudio Monitor said the following: “This robocop crossed the street and started punching me and then kicking me. All I could do was cover my face with my hands, because that’s where they were aiming. And the boots they wear are no regular shoes—they are made of some solid material. They kicked me right here. It started with punches and continued with kicking. When I realized that he was about to kill me, I yelled that Sozar Subari is the godfather of my brother. In response, one of the STD officers pulled this robocop aside and asked me: “If he’s your relative, what are you doing here?” My answer was that this is a Russian government that I oppose with peaceful protest. What saved me was a person whose name I could mention. But many didn’t have anyone to mention, so were beaten severely. And all this took place in a space where people could not resist. I guess they had a direct order to aim at the head and inflict as much damage as possible.”

Name	Alexandre Elisashvili
Story	On December 4, 2024, law enforcement officers detained Aleko Elisashvili, a leader of the political coalition "Strong Georgia," near the Courtyard Marriott Hotel in Tbilisi. The Ministry of Internal Affairs reported that Elisashvili is accused under Article 156, Part 2(a) of the Criminal Code, which pertains to persecution involving violence or the threat thereof. Elisashvili's attorney claims that during the arrest, excessive force was used, resulting in facial injuries, bruises, and rib fractures. The charges against Elisashvili is relate to an incident on December 2, 2024, on Kostava Street in Tbilisi, where Elisashvili allegedly assaulted Ali Babaev, chairman of the "National Congress of Azerbaijanis of Georgia," due to political affiliations. Elisashvili, a former member of parliament and Tbilisi City Council, is known for his activism and authorship of several books about Tbilisi. His supporters view the arrest as politically motivated, while authorities maintain it is a legal response to alleged criminal conduct. At the request of the Prosecutor's Office, the court modified Aleko Elisashvili's preventive measure, substituting pretrial detention with bail.

The lawyer visited the detainees at the Digomi isolation center. According to Zhizhiashvili, special forces officers physically assaulted both detainees and verbally insulted them. Signs of the beating were visible on their faces.

	He explained that the two men were returning home from the protest when their car was blocked by several special forces officers in Skoda cars, approximately 10-15 officers dressed in black. The officers removed the two men from the car, assaulted them, insulted them verbally, and then arrested them. Although Zhizhiashvili has not seen an official violation report, the detainees were arrested administratively. The lawyer also mentioned that after a flag or placard was reportedly meant to be hung on a Christmas tree, one of the detainees suggested that this may have been the reason they were pursued.

Name	Luka Dzidziguri
Age	20
Story	“On December 1, at dawn between 6 and 7 a.m., Luka Dzidziguri was detained on Rustaveli Avenue. The young man, who had attended the protest with his sister and her friend, was preparing to leave for home when the police once again used tear gas to disperse demonstrators. “Those who detained me were young. Then an older man arrived and said mockingly, ‘They’ve arrested a revolutionary boy. Tell us, how many fireworks and stones did you throw?’” - Luka recalled with Radio Liberty. “One man was yelling at women on the street, saying they should all be arrested. Suddenly, he noticed me, came toward me, and pulled my hat down over my face. Then, as I stood there with the hat covering my face, he punched me in the mouth. My lip split, and my mouth filled with blood. As I was being hit, the older man scolded the younger officers, telling them to calm down, but just as I thought he was about to defend me, he said, ‘If anyone is going to hit him, it’s going to be me. You know I hit the hardest.’ Then he struck me in the back of the head so hard that I lost strength in my legs and nearly lost consciousness. When they saw I was about to collapse, they ordered me to stand up and kicked me in the back when I didn’t react. Throughout this ordeal, the hat stayed over my face, so I couldn’t see anything. Realizing I couldn’t stand, they decided to move me and put me in a vehicle. For the first few minutes inside, the hat was still pulled over my face, leaving me unable to see anything.” Luka was taken to the Digomi police department. “There was one boy there who was beaten so badly his face was unrecognizable. I think his name was Saba; they immediately transferred him to a hospital. Both his eyes were shut, and he couldn’t see at all.” Due to overcrowding in detention facilities around Tbilisi, filled with detainees from the protests—most held for 48 hours—Luka was transferred to Zestafoni. “We arrived in Zestafoni city quickly but spent about six hours in the car because there was no room in the detention facility. I was soaking wet. Some people were bleeding, others had torn clothes, and all of us had been beaten. Then they began searching my bag. Inside, I had a syringe with saline solution, a spare pair of pants, and a bottle of drinking water. When they found the syringe, they asked if I was a drug addict. Then I heard the sound of the water bottle being opened, and suddenly, they poured it down the back of my neck, saying, ‘Here, cool down a bit.’ Another officer said, ‘Pour some on the front, he’ll enjoy it more.’ They emptied a two-liter bottle on me.”

Story	On December 1, Radio Liberty producer Beka Beradze was detained near the protest site by special forces and transferred to the Sagarejo temporary detention facility. He recounted to his lawyer that while walking near the protest, he suddenly found himself surrounded by police officers. Despite informing them that he was a journalist, he was detained. Upon realizing he was from Radio Liberty, the officers became more aggressive and began beating him. He was then thrown into a minivan with other detainees and subjected to approximately an hour of beatings. The vehicle held about eight people. According to Beradze, special forces members would periodically open the door, ask detainees, "Do you want a revolution?" hit them, and then leave.

My brother was walking ahead, and my friend and I were slightly behind him when special forces appeared. Three or four of them approached my brother and aggressively asked what he was doing there. When we saw this, we approached as well and asked what was going on and what the issue was. We told them that if the street was closed, we could take a different route. As soon as I said that, two of them stood on either side of me and told me to come with them. Then one of them added, 'Why are you talking so much?' They turned out my pockets and took my phone, wallet, and house keys. They tore off my backpack, emptied it, and found a water bottle and masks inside. They asked if I had anything illegal, and that's when I received the first punch," Tornike recounted.

	“I tried to call out to my brother to be careful, but when I turned back to say it, I was punched in the face several more times. Afterward, every time I tried to lift my head, I was punched again. Every special forces member we encountered hit me.”

Name	Nodar Aroshinadze
Story	On the night of December 2, at around 11 p.m., Nodar Aroshinadze, a historian of architecture, was detained on Rustaveli Avenue in front of the Tbilisi Marriott hotel. That night, Nodar stood on Rustaveli Avenue alongside dissatisfied citizens, facing special forces. Law enforcement officers were gradually advancing, pushing the demonstrators toward Republic Square. That day, the police began dispersing the protest earlier than usual.

"It was a day when Rustaveli was filled with people. The masked units began moving toward us slowly—it wasn't a chase that would instinctively make you run to save yourself. Standing on the front line, I was fully aware of the risk of being detained. I kept thinking about what one could do against such force, capable of anything.

I stood silently, doing nothing, when they came and grabbed us. After the beating, they dragged us toward the 'Robocops,' who opened their shields, allowing us to be taken to a van parked in front of the First School. Unlike previous days, they had a different strategy this time—we weren't beaten on the street. Instead, they told us to stay calm and wait, reassuring us that everything would be 'handled.'

Before throwing me into the van, they searched me. They took everything—documents, cigarettes, a lighter, my phone, and personal items. I wore a wooden cross around my neck, which they tore off as well. They took absolutely everything I had before throwing me into the van.

Once inside, a few men joined me and immediately began beating me—first with fists, then with kicks. They pinned me to the floor and mercilessly struck me. At one point, someone noticed from outside through the van's side door that I was being beaten. They told those inside, 'Close the door; people can see from outside.' They shut the door and continued the assault. At some point, I lost consciousness after a powerful kick to the face. When I came to, one of the masked men was pulling me up and yelling, 'Move to the back, stop pretending!' Moving to the back felt like salvation—I thought it was over. I climbed to the back and sat there. For about 2-3 minutes, I remained there before the door opened again, and they brought in new detainees. About ten of us ended up crammed in the van, and while they beat them as well, the violence wasn't as brutal since the van was now overcrowded," Nodar recounted.

This wasn't the only vehicle he found himself in that night. After the first van, he was transferred to another one, then to a patrol police car, which took him to the police department, and finally to an ambulance, which transported him to Ingorokva Clinic due to severe injuries.

"When the first van filled up with people, they suddenly opened the back door and told us to move to another vehicle. Since I was seated in the back, I was the first to step out and enter the new van, where the beatings and humiliation began again. One man came in and started talking to me with such animalistic rage that I felt like I was dealing with someone mentally unwell. He seemed to be looking for any excuse to beat me viciously.

He kept asking me questions, but no answer was ever 'correct.' For instance, he'd ask, 'Why are you at the protest?' If you answered, 'For my country,' he'd beat you. If you said, 'I wasn't at the protest,' he'd still beat you. If you said nothing, he'd hit you even harder. While hitting me, he kept yelling, 'You're paid 50 lari,' 'You're a drunk,' 'You're here on someone's orders,' or 'We're the traitors, and you love your country?'

At one point, the door opened, and those who were beating me were told, 'Get out, it's our turn now.' The masked men got out, new ones entered, and the beating resumed. I tried to shield my face with my hands, but they hit me even harder, saying, 'Lower your hands, or we'll beat you more!' They struck me on the head and yelled, 'Don't dirty the van!' adding extreme verbal abuse, including threats of stripping, rape, and harming our families. 'We'll burn you with flares at the station, and you'll see how it feels. We'll come to your

	homes after filling out the paperwork,' they said. Blood was pouring from my nose, mouth, and head. They yelled at me not to dirty the van, telling me to keep my head down. When I complied, my bloody head rested against the backrest of the driver's seat. At some point, they handed me a napkin and told me to clean up the blood because I was 'dirtying everything.' The driver of this van was speeding recklessly toward the police station, creating multiple near-accidents along the way. When two cars collided in Avlabari, he didn't even get out of the van and simply yelled at the other drivers. At the police station, I was brought in for paperwork and preparation for transfer to the pretrial detention facility. I felt unwell, and the police had to call an ambulance. One officer came up to me and said, 'If you're worried about being beaten again, don't be. They won't beat you here, so don't worry.' I was struggling to breathe, wheezing, and bleeding from my nose and mouth. Even then, my hands were cuffed. They eventually removed the cuffs and called an ambulance, which arrived about 15 minutes later. The paramedics insisted on transferring me to a clinic. Although the police were reluctant to let me go, the doctor told them, 'He's completely battered; he absolutely needs to go to the clinic.' That's how I ended up in the hospital."

Story	On December 2, during a special force raid on a peaceful protest on Rustaveli Avenue, Giorgi Davituri , a lawyer and head of the IDFI's Rule of Law and Media Freedom Department, was arrested. He was taken to a temporary detention center, where he was injured and verbally abused during his arrest. Despite not resisting, he was not informed of the reason for his detention, and his lawyer confirmed that no grounds for his arrest were provided. Giorgi Davituri refused to sign the protocol on administrative violation, as he did not break any law. The incident highlights the ongoing police violence against peaceful demonstrators, media workers, and the repression-based nature of the regime.

Name	Irakli Pipia
Story	On the night of December 2, around 11 p.m., anthropologist Irakli Pipia was detained on Rustaveli Avenue in front of the Tbilisi Marriott hotel. Earlier that day, he had delivered lectures to medical university students as part of his anthropology course, joined the teachers' and lecturers' march from Ilia University, and eventually reached Rustaveli Avenue. When the "Robocop" cordon opened and masked units moved forward, Irakli was standing near the exit to Chanturia Street. Masked individuals grabbed him, pulled him through the barricades, and immediately began beating and insulting him. "The first thing they asked was, 'What are you doing here? Will you come back again or not?' as they kept hitting me. They took my backpack, which contained my tablet, notebook, and other personal items, and threw me into a minibus already holding about nine people," Irakli recalled. Inside the minibus, the masked attackers rotated in and out, taking turns beating the detainees. They also took photos of the beaten individuals, apparently to share in a group

	chat, likely to connect the victims with their attackers' names. "They searched me a few meters from the cordon, took my phone and other items from my pockets, and celebrated finding a 'good phone.' One even took my flashlight from my pocket and put it into his own, knowing no one would force him to return it. This wasn't a search; it was robbery." The beatings inside the minibus were brutal. "During the assault, I began having spasms after a blow to my side made it impossible to breathe. Realizing I was struggling, one of them opened the door briefly and said, 'Go ahead, breathe.' After I took a breath, they sarcastically asked if I felt better, and when I nodded, they hit me again." From the first "detention vehicle," Irakli and another detainee, a young man around 20 years old, were transferred to a second vehicle that transported them to a police detention facility. "In the second vehicle, they tied our hands and started beating us again. I felt faint, asked for water, and they gave me a bottle. But when they saw I couldn't drink it properly, they poured half of it on my face and used the rest to hit us on the head with the bottle. I felt like I was losing myself and began to pray for my inner peace. The next group that came in to beat us didn't understand what I was doing at first, but when they realized, one of them started hitting me even harder, saying, 'Let's see if that prayer helps you!'" Irakli estimates he spent at least 10 minutes in the "detention vehicle," during which five groups of masked individuals rotated in and out to beat the detainees. Some of the masked men also searched the detainees' pockets and bags. "When they found nothing, they got angry. One man only had his car keys, and they took those as well," Irakli recalled.

Story	Protest participants Salome Zandukeli and her friend Natia Arabuli were beaten by several special forces officers during their escape on the night of December 1-2. The girls were hit on the head, had their phones taken, their nails broken, and were subjected to verbal abuse. "We ran instinctively. I did think it wasn't a good idea to go in there, but at the moment, we couldn't come up with anything else. As soon as we entered, the special forces stormed in too." Salome and Natia were running up the stairs, with male protestors running ahead of them. The men thought that maybe the girls would be spared, giving them time to escape, leaving the girls face-to-face with the special forces. "About 20-25 'Robocops' were chasing us. When I turned around, the first thing that came to my mind was to start recording a video, but this angered one of them so much that he ran at me, yelling to turn off my phone. When I didn't, he snatched it from my hand, threw it on the ground, and slammed me into the wall. They were shouting the most obscene insults at us: 'Who are these f?' During the struggle, he also broke my nails." Salome Zandukeli said that after this, they ran out of the building and sought refuge in a nearby bar on Rustaveli Avenue. However, within three to four minutes, the entire avenue was surrounded by special forces. Fearing a raid, the bar turned off its lights, locked the doors, and switched off the TV.

Name	Lado Todadze
Story	Lado Todadze, a protester recently released after five days in detention, shared harrowing details of his arrest by riot police during demonstrations in Batumi. Todadze described being beaten with "all the cruelty of Russian malice," recounting strikes to his head, face,

	and body. "They tried to make me kneel, to drag me out that way, but they couldn't," he said. The incident began when unrest broke out as riot police arrested a protester, causing a woman, reportedly the mother of the arrested, to faint. Todadze intervened to prevent the arrest but was seized himself, suffering head injuries during the violent encounter. Despite his ordeal, Todadze remains resolute. "I'll keep protesting," he affirmed, though he expressed caution about directly confronting riot police to avoid re-arrest. He called on fellow citizens to take collective action, warning, "If everyone doesn't join in, our country will slip from our hands." Todadze received initial medical care from acquaintances in Batumi before being transferred to Poti, where he noted improved treatment in detention. Reflecting on the events, he condemned masked officers as the "worst kind of people" and expressed deep concern about Georgia's future under such oppressive conditions.

Story	Vato Gvaza, a doctor, was beaten while providing medical care to the injured protesters: "Two days ago, two girls were found lying on the ground after a raid. A doctor rushed to help them, fulfilling her medical duties. At that moment, a group of 'bloodless' attackers appeared and began beating him. They intensified the attack after realizing he was a doctor. The sequence of the assault was as follows: one group of 'robot cops' arrived in a minibus, and he lost consciousness. Another minibus followed, and the assault continued, causing more loss of consciousness. It's important to note that Vato is tough and knocking him unconscious is no easy feat. Another disturbing detail: they stole his cross, mobile phone, and car keys. What kind of evaluation should we give this incident? Only one: rabid dogs must immediately be removed from power, or even those who are hopeful will no longer feel safe..." wrote activist Jaba Zarkua on Facebook, recounting the story of Orthopedic-Traumatologist, Dr. Vato Gvazava. Vato Gvazava: "They threw me down, and the first thing I remember is a kick in the face. Then they pulled me up, punching me in either side. They dragged me to this black car and shoved me in. One of them kept saying, "Don't hit them like that—we're still on camera." But, after they threw me in the vehicle, they continued beating me. I had bandages, betadine bottles, first-aid stuff, painkillers, etc. in my pocket. So this officer grabbed my pocket and asked, "You were firing pyrotechnics at me?" "What pyrotechnics?" I asked. "I'm a doctor, head of traumatology." He grabbed me, all beaten and bruised, pulled me, and led me out, saying, "Boss, this guy is some kind of doctor." I will not repeat the exact words he used all the while. This boss got in the vehicle and started beating me.... Then he threw in the corner, and now others, like three of them, took over. And this friend of mine, sitting next to me, he shielded me with his body. But they grabbed him and broke his arm over their knees. After surgery, he's still in critical condition. Besides many injuries, he has a broken arm. After this episode blew over, they took everything away from us, including my phone, car keys, and ripped off my cross. I had another cross on my neck. But they couldn't remove it. They kept trying. I said, "Leave the cross at least. Are you crazy?" Crazy? And that's when they hit me in the head with something. But that's not all. Their boss said, "Get his hands off his face. Straighten him up." So they did. They twisted my arms and hit me in the stomach. I passed out. Then they threw me out of the car and lead me through this corridor. These savages standing on either side and punching and kicking you, hitting you with batons, whatever they are holding in their hands. And you path through them. Then they tied my hands with a rope behind my back and pushed me into another car. Inside, one of the police officers pinned me with his ankle, and then I passed out again. I have a concussion. I have all kinds of cuts and sores inside my mouth. It's been like five days now, but fragments of

	tissue keep coming from my nose. I have nasal bridge fractures, leg injuries from when they made me stand and beat me. I also have a hematoma in the thigh area. My shoulder is dislocated and badly injured."

Story	On December 3, during the protest, Khinkiladze's companion, Mamuka Kakhidze, filmed a police officer, Mamuka Kakhidze, eating sunflower seeds and throwing the shells onto the street. Khinkiladze describes what happened after the video was taken: "We were at the protest that evening and saw a police officer throwing sunflower seed shells onto the street. We decided not to react, so we wouldn't cause a scene," says Khinkiladze. "Later, a young woman approached the officer, and though I couldn't hear, I assumed she was giving him a warning, but the officer continued throwing seeds onto the street. Then, my companion and I approached him and said, 'What is this behavior?' I simply asked the officer this; I didn't insult him. If I did, let them provide evidence. I also said that he should be the one to receive a warning, not me." Khinkiladze claims that after his question, he was arrested. "The same officer who I had addressed sat next to me in the police car. He insulted me, saying, 'You're all European faggots in this protest,' and cursed at me. I told him that my mother had just passed away, so please don't insult me. The officer, who was driving the car, heard this and continued to curse at me all the way to the station. He punched me in the face several times, hitting me in the head and jaw. I had a split lip, and bruises were confirmed by the expert examination. These people are torturers. Then, the same officer came to court and claimed that I was aggressive and called the police officers 'slaves.' He said I attacked him and was resisting arrest." Khinkiladze, who was fined by the judge, questions the fairness of the trial: "Is this justice?" he asks.

Story	Around 1:00-2:00 a.m. on December 3, while I was attending a peaceful protest on Besiki Street, black-masked officers from the Special Tasks Department appeared. When they attempted to detain me, I calmly declared that I was surrendering and had no intention of resisting. Despite this, they began to search me and used disproportionate force. One of them stepped aside and advised the others not to continue applying physical pressure on me, noting that the nearby residential buildings provided clear visibility of their actions. Nevertheless, I was placed in a vehicle belonging to 112 (a Ford Transit) with other detainees, where the punishment continued. Inside the vehicle, six masked officers simultaneously assaulted us. They later attempted to record a video, demanding that we repeat the phrase, "Kharabe is a great man." (Khaereba – Zviad Kharazishvili is the head of STD) When we firmly refused, the beatings resumed for two more rounds. Following this physical abuse, we were handed over to a patrol crew, which distributed us to different pretrial detention facilities. After spending 30 hours in detention, we were transferred to Tbilisi City Court, where only protest-related cases were being processed. All charges were fabricated using the same script, and protesters were sentenced to up to 7 days in detention. As the pretrial detention facilities in Tbilisi were full, detainees had to be distributed across facilities in other cities. This poorly staged "soap opera" concluded without any acknowledgment of the physical abuse inflicted on the detainees, and everyone was unjustly labeled guilty.

Story	A 20-year-old detainee, who was severely beaten and held at the Dighomi detention center for over 35 hours, was taken to Tbilisi Central Hospital on December 4 after his condition

	deteriorated. His trial, originally scheduled for the same day, was postponed to December 12 due to his health. The detainee's lawyer, representing the human rights organization Rights Georgia, repeatedly requested medical care for the young man, citing severe headaches, nausea, and difficulty moving. Despite these requests, the detention center refused assistance. During his court hearing, the judge initially refused to delay proceedings, claiming an ambulance had been called. However, it was later discovered that no call had been made, forcing the lawyer to arrange emergency medical care himself. When an ambulance arrived, responders initially suggested private transport to a clinic, which would have shifted medical costs to the detainee. Only after persistent advocacy from the lawyer was he taken to the hospital. Representatives of the Public Defender's Office and Special Investigation Service later noted that decisions about transferring the detainee to a clinic rested with the detention center's medical staff, who exhibited indifference. This incident reflects a recurring pattern. Days earlier, another detainee was denied proper care for a concussion and fractures, leading to multiple instances of unconsciousness before receiving emergency surgery. The detainee, arrested on December 4 near the metro station, reported being chased, beaten, and threatened by masked men who later transferred him to the Dighomi detention center. He described severe physical abuse, suffocation, and threats of sexual violence during the arrest. Rights Georgia criticized the detention center staff for violating European human rights standards, emphasizing the state's responsibility to ensure adequate medical care for individuals in custody.

Story	On 4th Decmeber, journalist Shota Dimitrishvili was arrested on Chichinadze Street, next to Parliament. He was detained administratively, and according to his lawyer, he has been transferred to the Zahesi isolation facility. Juba Khatamadze, a lawyer claims that the journalist was beaten during his detention. According to the lawyer, like other detainees, Dimitrishvili was taken to the head of the Special Tasks Department, Zviad Kharazishvili, known as "Khareba," who allegedly humiliated the detainees. " While they were talking, someone shouted at Khareba from behind, and as soon as Khareba was called, they immediately ran out and arrested him. [...] He speaks of violence. When they took him in, masked officers beat him in the head during transportation, insulted him, and hit him in the face, as he said. They took him up to Khareba, as they did with other detainees. Many said that the detainees who were arrested last night, including those arrested near Chichinadze, were taken to the same place where Khareba was in a car. They took his bag, which contained his phone. At Khareba's office, he was subjected to humiliating and offensive remarks, and Khareba reportedly filmed him, as others claimed," said lawyer Juba Khatamadze.

Story	During the trial, Saba Skhvitaridze claimed that he had been abducted and tortured. According to him, police officers neither explained the reason for his detention nor provided any clarification before handing him over to an unidentified operational group in the Gori area. "I was taken to a facility in Dighomi, handed over to four masked individuals, and beaten. They searched me, and then other masked individuals carried out acts of violence against me using various objects. They even broke a piece of wood over me," Skhvitaridze recounted.

	At the hearing, the prosecutor argued that Saba Skhvitaridze physically assaulted a police officer and caused injuries, alleging that Saba struck the officer in the head with an object, which required the officer to be hospitalized. According to defense attorney Irakli Chomakhashvili, the prosecution presented only a 29-second video as evidence. He asserted that the confrontation was initiated by masked individuals, who provoked the incident. "They [the masked individuals] had no identification or insignia, nor did they clarify that they were police officers. When asked who they were, they could not provide an answer. These unidentified masked police officers verbally abused the defendant," Chomakhashvili stated.

Name	Vato Bzhalava
Story	Georgian Foundation for Strategic and International Studies (Rondeli Foundation) researcher Vato Bzhalava was snatched from street while walking with his dog on December 12. Lawyer Giorgi Tabatadze states that after his arrest, Vato Bzhalava was physically assaulted by a police officer at the police station. The officer struck Bzhalava twice in the face and kicked him in the thigh. According to the lawyer, they demanded Bzhalava's phone password. “One of the police officers entered the room, asked for his phone password, and pressured him to admit which group he was part of. Vato responded that he wasn't a member of any such group and would not give the password, after which the officer physically assaulted him, hitting him twice in the face and kicking him in the thigh, causing a bruise,” said the lawyer to "Mtavari Arkhi/Main Channel" Giorgi Tabatadze also mentioned on "Formula" that the administrative violation report claimed Bzhalava resisted the police, but video footage shows him following the officers without resistance, wearing civilian clothes. Bzhalava was detained under Article 173 of the Administrative Offenses Code, which refers to disobedience to police orders. The Public Defender's office later visited him.

Name	Giorgi Vashadze
Story	On December 17, during a protest rally on Rustaveli Avenue, Giorgi Vashadze, leader of the "Unity National Movement" coalition, was attacked by an unidentified individual. Giorgi Vashadze recounted the incident: "I was on Rustaveli Avenue with peaceful demonstrators when I was physically attacked by a person wielding a sharp screwdriver. He assaulted me from behind, first striking me in the back, then targeting my head and neck area with the object. The screwdriver was retrieved from the scene by us. With the help of the demonstrators, the attacker was repelled. Additionally, we recovered a key belonging to the attacker at the scene, which included a lift chip that directly identifies him. This individual is Davit Edisherashvili, born in 1976, residing in Vazisubani. He is clearly depicted in the video footage." Despite the identification of the attacker, the police have not detained him. According to the Ministry of Internal Affairs, the incident is being investigated under Article 126 of the Criminal Code, which addresses the offense of violence.

Name	Nino Kvitaishvili
Story	According to Nika Melia, one of the leaders of the Coalition for Change, a member of the party's political council and the Tbilisi City Assembly, Nino Kvitaishvili, was struck in the face by a sharpened glass bottle thrown by a "titushka," requiring surgery. "Three days ago, a group of 'titushki' attempted to provoke our comrades. During this, Nino Kvitaishvili, a member of our party's political council and the Tbilisi City Assembly, shielded her teammates, trying to de-escalate the situation and prevent further escalation. In the process, a sharpened glass bottle thrown by a 'titushka' struck her in the face. She required surgery and is currently in the hospital. Despite the fact that the perpetrator has been identified, the investigative authorities have not initiated an investigation into this incident. I express my solidarity with all the victims. Bruises will heal, but those standing on the side of darkness in this process will never regain their humanity," writes Nika Melia in a statement.
